

Side Notes: One of the special things about being a parent is that it gives you the opportunity to read stories with your children. Children are so innocent and love you no matter what. They are also very willing to forgive and always want to spend time with you and enjoy the attention they receive during story time. One of the things I love about story time is the simple and important lessons taught by children's stories which we as adults often times forget.

Some of my favorite children's stories teach about spending time with loved ones, forgiving others and giving attention to those we love. If we could remember these few lessons, we'd be able to live a much richer and fuller life.

As you play through this song, try to remember the lessons taught by your favorite bedtime stories and apply them to your own life. Think about the feelings you had as you spent time with loved ones reading stories. If you can capture these feelings as you play the song, you'll catch a glimpse of the emotions I was trying to share when I wrote this song.
